

Dear Parent/Guardian,

Jefferson Center for Mental Health and the Clear Creek Schools have partnered since 1996 to provide support to children and families within the district. The School-Based Therapy Program is an innovative collaboration between Jefferson Center and the Clear Creek Schools with the primary goal of increasing access to mental health services for students and their families. Adolescence can be an exciting and challenging time for both students and their families; many students benefit from extra support with family conflict, coping skills, and/or relationship skills. Therapeutic counseling services provided to students at school helps to reduce barriers that sometimes occur due to social stigma, lack of transportation, lack of childcare and/or lack of medical insurance.

We are pleased to let you know that Debbie Corriero, LCSW, CAC III, and Sue Crawford, LPC are the school-based therapists for Jefferson Center for Mental Health at Clear Creek Middle and High School.

Debbie previously worked as a Juvenile Diversion Coordinator working with first time juvenile offenders and their families. She started the school-based therapist in Clear Creek County, where she worked from 1996-2002. Her work has also included emergency and crisis management, and adventure-based counseling with adolescents.

Sue has been the elementary school-based therapist for the Clear Creek School District for 18 years, working with kids in preschool through 6th grade. She is now one day a week at the Middle/High School. Her experience includes work with trauma victims and their families, crisis management, and disaster mental health.

If you are interested in school-based therapy services through Jefferson Center for Mental Health, please feel free to contact Debbie or Sue at 303-679-4609. In addition to our services offered through the Clear Creek Schools, Jefferson Center has a wide variety of other programs and services for members of our community.
